FOR CONGRESS:

ASA P. GROVER.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1867.

The Cincinnati Gazette, referring the imputed language of Madison which Colonel Forney lately exhumed his command of the military power to re-sist the judgment of the constitutional tribunals, makes it imperative to suspend him from power during the trial. Con-gress could no more permit him to hold the power of resorting to arms to resist its judgment than a Judge could permit a malefactor to bring arms and confederates into court to overawe its Judgment, or to assassinate it if it found him guilty.

Our readers have seen, from the con usive letter of Mr. Curtis, that the language in question could never have been re, cannot be pleaded in favor of the neresy of suspension. So much of the Gazette's argument is done away with by the simple truth of history. The rest is one away with by common sense. Congress, the Gazette says, could no permit the President to hold the power of resorting to arms to resist its judgment. Why not? The danger of his resistance would depend on his disposition to resist, combined with his ability; but neither his disposition nor his ability would be lessened by what he and a majority of the people regard as a removal in violation of the Constitu On the contrary, both his disposition'and his ability, assuming that he had ened by such a step, insomuch that he probably would, as he unquestionably should, resist the step with all the power at his command. It would become his solemn duty as an officer and a man. Certainly he would be more likely to reist an arbitrary resolution of suspension than a regular judgment of removal, and as certainly he could resist the former with more power, both moral and physical, than he could resist the latter. In other words, suspension would indefiniteincrease whatever danger of resistance there might exist. This is manifest. The Gazette's argument, accordingly, vanishto hold on much more safely than it could attempt to suspend him. Suspension as a measure of precaution against his resistance to removal is indeed preposterous. It is as if you should spit in a man's face to prevent him from knocking you down ring the trial of impeachment, but, on the ere score of expediency, there is the est of reasons for not suspending him. If he could be suspended, he might be removed from office without trial or conviction, on the vote of a majority of a quowho, consequently, would hold at their mercy his official life. We are now speaking without particular reference to the incumbent. Such an Executive, it is clear, would be more dependent on the House than one of its own members is, for a member cannot be expelled without the concurrence of two-thirds. The Constituion knows no such Executive. A proposition, it is true, was made in the evention of 1789 to create such an Executive, but it was opposed by Madison, and decisively rejected, getting only three votes out of eleven. Madison's argument, which was recorded by his own hand, is the argument we have just stated. "The 'resident', he said, "is made too dependent already on the Legislature by the power one branch to try him in consequence of an impeachment by the other. This termediate suspension will put him in the power of one branch only. They can at any moment, in order to make way for the anctions of another who will be more favorable to their views, vote a temporary removal of the existing magistrate." This

Not only, however, is there no good reason for suspending the President du-

The question, however, is not now one f mere expediency; it is also a question of obedience to the Constitution, which unequivocally forbids suspension, and from which, as we have seen, its framers positively rejected the process. This should end the question. And it does with the friends of the Constitution.

The section disqualifying certain classes of rebels from holding office under the Government of the United States, is wholly omitted in the proposed substitution. This is the most distasteful provision of the amendment to the late rebels. It is very doubtful whether the people of the Northern States will ever be willing to forego this condition. Regarding the rebellion as a high crime and those engaged in it as traitors, and more expecially those who as a high crime and those engaged in it as traitors, and more especially those who abused their high trusts to betray the Government, they insist that this odious class shall not be restored to favor and again placed in positions that they may abuse, to the detriment of the Government and the peril of the Union. It is, perhaps, possible to accomplish by legislation all that is made absolute by this section; and if so, it may be well to consider whether for the sake of the restoration and unity of the States, this condition may not be abandoned. —Cin. Commercial.

This very frank argument may persuade-

This very frank argument may persuade radicals, but it will hardly persuade others the substituted proscription being the full equivalent of the original; for the Commercial is mistaken in supposing that the proscription of the pending amendment is "made absolute." Congress may re-Congress may reemove it, so that it is no more and no less "absolute" than the substitute the Commercial suggests. Both alike depend on the will of Congress; and both alike accomplish the proscription of Southern men. There is consequently no difference between the two. The exchange of the between the two. The exchange of the bopes, one for the other would be a wonderful concession "for the sake of the restoration and unity of the States." Sacrifices of this kind are laid upon the radical altar every hour in the day; but we are not aware that the cause of "the restoration and unity of the States" is advanced by

The following letter expresses the popular feeling on the subject of the Congressional election:

TILTON, KY., February 7, 1867.

To the Editors of the Louisville Journal: Your remarks relative to the time set be the Legislature of Kentucky for the electhe Legislature of Rentucky to the eace tion of members of Congress are eminent ly just and proper. You certainly do no overestimate the importance of a full del egation from Kentucky, prepared to take their seats on the 4th of March. If there can be one good reason for putting off the election until the 4th of May, I have not yet heard it. The sentiment universally prevalent among Conservatives and Democrats is that we should have the election as speedily as possible. The issue is fairly made up. It is restoration and heave.

now say that our nine representatives may not turn the angry tide of fanaticism, which will doubtless inangurate measures at the extra session, which, if successful the Legislature in this matter, candor requires me to say that its action in putting off the election so long is the blunder of the session. Practically, it is playing into the hands of the radicals. Is there no remedy? CONSERVATIVE. Yes, there is a remedy, in the passage of a bill amending the law in question, and this remedy, we rejoice to say, will probably be applied without delay, as the amendatory bill has been introduced in the Senate, and made the special order for to-day. The bill fixes the first Monday of March as the time of the election, which, if the measure should pass within two or three days, would give for the canvass twenty days, the minimum period now fixed by law in the case of special elections of Congressmen, This, under the circumstances, is time enough. We hope that a later day will not be named, for, even with this day, the members elect ean hardly reach their seats before a quarter of the session is over. So much time has been spent in fixing the period that the period itself should be as short as possible within the limits of fitness.

The most cursory reader of the news apers of the day must have noticed that of late crime has fearfully increased in the land. Like the Eastern scourge, it appears to visit us in an epidemic form. And what is more noticeable, its ravages are not confined to any one particular section, but appear to be universal in their while nearly all the "outrages" with which; she is accredited are political fictions, yet far too many tragedies actually occur to indicate a healthy state of society. But the East, the North, the West, all are far ahead of the South in that respect-and especially the East, the land of moral deas. Not a day but we are shocked with the details of some horrist cruelty practised toward children among our Puritan friends-murder, so foul and unnatural as strike down poor, old, and defenceless women in the dead hour of night-ravish short, every species and phase of crime, scarcely any attention is paid to their details. We have become callous as a people, and we are beginning to place no higher estimate upon the life of a human being than we do upon the existence of a

Upon the floor beside us is a pile of papers through which we have just rum of the House of Representatives, glanced, and it was the frequency with which narratives of crime in their columns greeted our eve that induced us to non this article. Why, in a half hour's time. we have read the particulars of a dozen robberies planned and carried out on the most gigantic scale. Outrages upon women, violent assaults, burglaries, summary executions by Judge Lynch, and murder are reported as occurring everywhere. The atrocity of the rapidly succeeding instances is not so much a matter of note as their frequency. Every horror, almost before we get the full details, is supplemented by something still more horrible. It is lamentable, indeed, that the very requency of these cases has made the public mind callous to crime; and it is remarkable, too, that the great majority of these crimes of late have not been committed in the large cities, but in quiet ountry towns and in the rural districts. Some of the lawlessness that obtains at present is due, no doubt, to the late war, which has returned to private life a restless population, which, when not actively employed in something good, is sure to stray is the reason of expediency. And it is has certainly schooled the American mind o hold human life as something cheaper than it was considered six years ago. But the almost general indifference now to quences of the acts of lawlessness, is greatly due, in our opinion, to the example set in disregarding the fundamental aw of the land as written in the Constitution; in setting at naught the decisions f the highest court in the land, unless those decisions chime with the edicts of a caucus; and in threats to depose the Chief Magistrate of the country, unless he consents to become the President of a party. With such examples before them, it is not unnatural that the people at large should feel at liberty to break lesser laws. and to commit, by comparison, lesser

The following letter by Lord Macaulay, hitherto unpublished, is, though written nearly twenty-one years ago, still so appropriate at this time, and otherwise so characteristic, that it will beread with genly to a letter referring to some remarks ply to a letter referring to some remarks made by Mr. Macaulay in Parliament. The petition referred to in the letter was the monster Chartist petition, boasing of 3,000,000 signatures, presented by Mr. Duncombe in July, 1842. In accordance with the request in the opening sentence, he letter was not printed at the time; but send what I write to the newspapers.

"You do not at all shake my opinion-indeed, you confirm it. You tell me that most of those who put their names to the all downward extension is open, in its de-gree, to the same objection, it is important that we should not exaggerate the limits most of those who put their names to the petition presented by Mr. Duncombe did of its application. One thing is beyond question—the lower we go in the social stale the less political capacity we must expect to find. It is simply impossible that the persons engaged in daily manual labor from the earliest age should possess either the knowledge or the habits of thought which are the result, not only of what it contained. Now, I need not know what it contained. Now, I need not remind you that this was no common petition. It was described as the national petition, as the manifesto of the unrepresented millions. It was carried to Westminster with extraordinary pomp. The ocession of banners and devices stretchnental training, but of leisure, of travel-House of Commons. It was proposed that world. But these are not the only qualifi-cations for the exercise of a vote, nor must the petitioners should be heard by their deputies at our bar. I think, therefore, that this was a document of very competent judges of their own interests. Now, these interests form a very large element in those national interests which derstanding its purport. You assure me, however, that the hundreds of thousands who signed is solemn confession of political faith had never looked at it. It was every statesman is bound to upon this ground alone, without considering the legitimate influences at the comso long, you say, that they could not read it. Why, ten minutes would have sufficed mand of the wealthier and more educated classes, the presumption is in favor of giving them a considerable share of representation. Happily experience does not altogether warrant Lord Macaulay's conviction that "they would give their for the purpose. But ten minutes, it seems would have been more than inese people who wanted as to put the whole govern-ment into their hands, could spare for the ment into their hands, could spare for 'he consideration of a matter so grave. Rather than take the trouble of informing themselves, they set their hands to any atrocious absurdity that was put before them by a demagogue in whom they reposed an unmerited confidence. Observe, it is you, not I, who say all this. I give full credit to your statement. But what is the inference? Is it not this—that many, your many of our industries, wall-means. votes, as they gave their signatures, in blind reliance on worthless leaders." It was proved last session that in classes already command a majority, and vet no mere professional agitator has of late found his way into the House of Commons. Desperate as the experiment would be we venture to doubt whether even universal suffrage would realize in this country either the hopes of its advoing fellow countrymen are not at present cates or the fears of its opponents. Its first effect would assuredly be to increase the power of the landed interest, and it

qualified to exercise political functions with advantage to themselves and to the with advantage to themselves and to the community? And observe that it is for this very class that the Chartists claim, not a share of power, but the whole govern-ment of the State. For, if universal suf-frage were established, such persons as ose who signed the national petition, thout knowing what it was, would form the majority of every constituent body, and ment, or one hundred, but all the six hunred and fifty-six. Can a man of sense ke you doubt on what candidates the noice of such electors would fall? Can u doubt that they would give their votes, our present legislators have committed er-rors. No doubt all governments, err; for all governments are composed of men; and you can no more make perfect governents out of such imperfect materials than ou can make a marble palace out of broks. But between the errors into which our Par-liaments have too often fallen and the er-rors of the Chartists, there is, in my opinon, a great distinction. The errors of our arliaments, however great, have not been such as to kill the very root of na-tional prosperity. On the contrary, you would, I apprehend, admit that there is a general tendency toward improvement; that civilization advances; that science makes constant progress; that many abuses which were in full force within our memory have disappeared, or are fast disappearing: that, in short, most of the changes which are made are changes for the better. I. therefore, though I do not thing our present system berfect, look on it with hope and with complacency. But the Chartist system, as set forth in the na-tional petition, would, I am certain, in no long time, reduce us to a depth of misery ain, in three generations, as barbarous an island as Madegascar. His correspondent, Mr. An-derson, seems to have maintained that persons signing that petition were not responsible for all that it contained, inasmuch as most of them had never read it So lame a defense is, of course, ridiculed by Lord Macaulay with characteristic vigor. He reminds Mr. Anderson that a petition bearing three millon signatures, described as a national manifesto, carried to Westminster with extraordinary pomp, ac companied by a procession which stretched more than a mile, and ushered in by a motion that the petitioners should be heard by their deputies at the bar, was a document of no ordinary character. thousands who signed this solemn con-fession of political faith have never looked at it. A few days since, this suspicion assumed a more posiin advance. Yesterday the old man armed himself with a revolver, and openly charged his son with the theft. High words soon arose between them, when the old man drew his pistol and shot his son through the head, the ball entering just behind the ear and coming out at the cheels he then put the weapon to his own mouth and shot himself, the ball coming out at the back of his head. They both fell and were found by the neighbors and cared for. Strangely enough, they are yet both alive, and the attending physiian gives it at his opinion that they will both recover. Approaching the place where the boy was buried, the dog stopped, snuffed the air, and whined piteously. He then began trying to dig into the drift. The party then began digging and throwing aside the snow. The dog dashed in beneath their shovels, and found the boy's cap. He evidently knew to whom it belonged, for as he dragged it forth it gave him great joy, and he barked gladly. Here was a trace, at least, but it was not without fear and trembling that search was continued, and with the help of the dog, who seemed as earnest as any of the party, the boy was soon found there in seemed most uneasy at the absence of the red no injury whatever, said it was quit

A FALSE DISPATCH.—It does appear that no course is too contemptible for the radical papers to pursue, in order to make capital among their people, and fan the flames of prejudice and enmity against the South burning in their bosoms. In the New York Tribune of Friday is a dispatch purporting to be from this city; which states that a white man poisoned his colored mistress, was arrested, taken before a 'Squire Kennedy, to whom the murderer explained that he had only taken the negro woman's life to keep her from A Chicago landlord has invented a new plan of informing his wife that he was the father boarding. The tenderhearted magistrate, considering the explacolored man, formerly nation perfectly satisfactory, released the ident Lincoln's barber, has been appointed a poisoner. Whereupon the virtuous Tribune moralizeth editorially, to the great scandal of Kentucky justice.

Of course there is not a word of truth in the dispatch. The woman, Belle Hoover, was white, a native of Indiana, an inmate of a house of prostitution in this city, and seth Turner, of Wilmington, Illinois, and Joseph Duxberry, of La Salle, have played a series of matches at draughts, for a stake of $1,000. ANNUAL CARNIVAL OF THE ORPHEUS SO-CIETY. - The masquerade of the Orpheus ociety at Masonic Temple last evening more than fulfilled the flattering predic tions of its friends. It was a grand success in every particular. The attendance of spectators and masquers was very In its detail the programme was one of the most excellent yet devised by the Orpheus. The variety, beauty, and nfinite fancy of the costumes was said to excel all kindred affairs, while the respectability and numbers of the attendants, the observance of the proprieties, and the order and decorum prevalent, proclaimed this the most brilliant bal nasque ever given in Louisville. Extensive and judicious preparations had been made to insure the eclat of the festival. The officers and committees have cause to pride themselves upon their admirable At an early hour, carriages and hors cars began to arrive with loads of masqueraders, male and female. Around the entcance to the Temple were hundreds of persons, who endured the damp of the evening in order to watch the devotees of the vehicles seemed to increase, every o'clock, the festival was at its height and numbered hundreds of masques, and as many "lookers on in Vienna. internal decorations of the hall were ample and approlarge The splendid band of the Second United States Infantry was located on the stage and discoursed, at proper intervals, most delicious nusic. On either side of the stage were suspended several crinoline cages, in which fowls of the harn-vard species cronched ridien lously enough, as may be supposed. The same quaint phenomena appeared around the throne of Momus at the opposite end of the hall. To the left of the merry monarch's shrine was located the Russo-American Telegraph Office, from whence issued during the evening many strangely phrased and somewhat sarcastic dispatches which were listened to with immense satisfaction and applauded heartily.

Few other devices were employed to embellish the walls, pillars, or ceiling. The body of the hall was of course devoted to the masquerade. Here the scene was one of the utmost grandeur, every imaginable costume and character being represented. The ingenuity of the costumer must have been exhausted in the conception and preparation of the respective garbs. Kings and queens, emperors and empresses, dukes and duchesses, artisans and laborers, beggars and vivandiers, Zouaves and gipsies, loafers, and negroes, and representatives of every nationality under the sun, of every human avocation, and o nearly everything animate and inanimate. moved promiseously through the hall, en gaged in the exhibition of the several pe culiarities of their respective assumptions. We noticed some admirable caricatures of Momus and other classical representatives of humor and mirth These typified graphically the various expressions of the comic muse, their peculiar and humorous grins and actions elicting the loudest laughter whenever contemplated. Conspicuous among the charac ters formally introduced by the herald of the festival were Maximilian and Napoleon, Sir Morton Peto, the Emperor of Russia, Bismarck, &c. All of these noted personages excited eager notice, and were ionized throughout the evening. We cannot devote space in this number to a full description of the exercises. The conclusion of the regular programme was the signal for unmasking, and then, for the first time during the evening, the incognito which had temporarily severed the nearest ties and the most affectionate individuals was removed. An intermission then transpired, affording an oppor tunity for the masqueraders and company to partake of a sumptuous repast. The hearts tripped merrily, and joy reigned supreme until the daylight hour. Mr. Chandler moved that the Senate take up the resolution offered by him on Saturday last, instructing the Judiciary mittee to inquire whether A. Johnson nt and acting President the United States, had any authority to appoint Provisional Governors for the States recently in rebellion. Mr. Chandler said: I think this resolution is very important at this time. If the President and no authority of law under the Constitution to appoint Provisional Governors for the States lately in rebellion, then the tion of these Governors fail. these States, if the inception itself was illegal. Now, sir, I desire that the Judi-ciary Committee should make an early reort upon this subject. It is due to the ent and to the country that these shall be settled, and settled at an

I am not a lawyer, and am not comp ent to decide for myself, still less for the Senate, whether there was any such authority. We know, Mr. President, that when Andrew Johnson, through the bul-Wilkes Booth, became President of the United States, the rebels had laid down their arms, and all these rebel States were held by the military powers, and under these military powers Andrew John der these miniary powers Andrew Johnson had the right to appoint military Governors, not only for every one of the States lately in rebellion, but for every city, had he seen fit so to do. The laws of the contract of the c of war are as well understood as the constitution and laws of peace. They regulate and control all civilized nations. When President Lincoln wanted a government in Tennessee, he appointed Anernment in Tennessee, he appointed Andrew Johnson a Brigadier General in the army, and as Brigadier General in the nited States Army, he appointed him lilitary Governor of Tennessee. This a right to do as Commander-in-Chief; but, sir, it was another and a differ-ent thing to appoint a Provisional Gov-ernor. I believe, sir, it is an office un-known to the Constitution and the laws of our Government, and an office which, in my judgment, he had no authority to

These Governors were not sent to the made them any more Governors if we had confirmed them, because the Senate and Andrew Johnsan together could not have created the office. If there was no authority of law, then it required the House of Representatives and Senate to create it. Andrew Johnson having first enacted a law creating an office before an officer and the laws of the Constitution and the laws are against the Government. hold these States by military power and forces. These laws of war have been changed from age to age. They are arbitrary; they are simply the will of the conquerer. Under the laws of war in ancient these property. to death. These laws from age to become modified; but as late as July, age become modified; but as late as July, 1866, the laws of war empowered the conqueror to levy all the expenses of the war upon the conquered.

If Andrew Johnson, in violation of the laws of war, in violation of the Constitution, and without authority under the laws of war, has assumed and exercised subscite that did not belong to him, but laws of war, has assumed and exercised authority that did not belong to him, but which belonged to Congress, then I don't hesitate to say, and say with deliberation, and for this one act, and for it alone, Andrew Johason should be impeached. I say it, sir, as one of his judges—I say it understanding the force of what I say.

But there are other allegations made against Mr. Johnson. It is alleged—I know not whether it is true of false—that Mr. Johnson delivered over property seized from the rebels (railroad rolling stock throughout the South) without authority of law to rebel railroad agencies, and rolling stock was sent from the North South worth many millions of dollars without authority of law, and in violation of law by express order of A. Johnson sold on credit to those rebel railroads. If this allegation be true, I say Andrew Johnson should be impeached and removed. It is should be impeached and removed. It is alleged again—I know not whether true or false—that A. Johnson, without authorr false—that A. Johnson, without by of law, and in violation of law, ordered he collection of district tax levied on these

It is alleged, I know not whether true or false, that Andrew Johnson made ap-pointments during the recess of the Senate by removing incumbents, and during the late long session of Congress did not send names to the Senate at all, but on adjournment, without consulting the Sen-ate, and in direct violation of the Consti-tution and his oath of office, he reap-pointed these men, never having sent them to the Senate at all. If it be true,

A. Johnson should be impeached.
Mr. Chandler denied that the President has any right to have 'a plan after it has been rejected by Congress. Let him obey the laws or disobey them at his peril.
There is a dread. He said that we, in excuting our constitutional powers will ecuting our constitutional powers, will oring some dreadful calamity on this na-ion. This nation has come victorious out of the most terrible rebellion the world ever saw. The removal of the man who has violated the Constitution of the United States would produce about the same amount of excitement in the country that amount of excitement in the country that the removal of Custom-house officers in the city would produce. And more, this people have declared, and that a decree has been registered on high, that this nation shall stand, and no man, or set of men, and no combination of men, whether headed by Jeff Davis or by A Johnson, or my other living man, can overthrow i

In the case of the American Art Union, the distribution was of pictures, and proposed to be made among subscribers of $5 each, who thereby became members, and the pictures were to be distributed by lot ong the subscribers. In this case a sui was brought for the penalty and forfeiture of the property. In deciding that case the court held such a distribution was a lottery according to the common accepta-tion of the term, and the Chief Justice says: "We should be trifling with and per-verting the language of the Constitution if veiting the language of the Constitution if we were to say that it is not a lottery within its prohibition." The motives which lead to getting up lotteries have nothing to do with the question before us. It may be for purposes of charity, or for the attainment of money to promote religious objects, or for private gain. All are alike forbidden if they come within the provisions of the Constitution and of the statute under the designation of lotteries or devices of chance. I have said more on this subject than usual in charges to a Grand Jury, because I have seen annunced in the papers various plans for raising money by pers various plans for raising money by lot or chance, which may or may not be within the evils intended to be guarded against, and it will be well for those who are engaged in getting them up to pause and inquire whether they are not engaged in schemes which may hereafter be held to be violation of the statute.

The tall, grace-ful, woman by her side, dressed in black, with a white lace shawl, is Alice Cary. with a white lace shawl, is Alice Cary. For face and presence she would be singled out in any company. Her face is sad and sweet, her eyes the gentlest brown. One of the most distinguished of American portrait painters said of her: "She is beautiful; I find myself constantly turning to her face." This is not over-praise: The eyes which discern it trace on her countenance that imperishable beauty of the spirit which survives and surpasses the beauty of youth."

A negro, named Arthur Speight, who, by his industry, had made a bale of cotton, took the same to Memphis last Thursday and sold it. Anxious to extend his operations another season he employed one Chas. Anderson and four other negroes to go to Cuba, Tenn., with him to work. As the boys were somewhat involved, Arthur generously paid their claims and furnished them with some necessaries, which took the greater amount of his pile, when all started for the country. After going a short distance, the five lads jumped from the wagon, leaving their colored employer minus his money and alone in his glory. He returned to town and had the rogues arrested.
